Paul Schwan

Edmund L. Kagy

Clarence H. Handerson

The Founders -The story of how three college friends wished to continue their friendships after college and into the future, and how, after gathering a few additional friends together, formed a club that became Gyro.

The three were Paul Schwan, Gus Handerson and Ed Kagy. They were students at Western Reserve University - enrolled in the fall of 1907, and all three graduated in 1911.

The trio, having established a firm friendship in their first year, never wavered from their camaraderie. Edmund L. Kagy - probably the best known because of his long association with Gyro, was born 21 April 1889 in Cleveland Heights, Ohio. Following graduation, he was a teacher and coach. With the outbreak of WWI, he, along with two other friends, formed a Gyro training company. By May of 1918 he was a first lieutenant and shipped overseas, first to England and then France.

Returning to the US after the war, he started his own business. He acted as Gyro International S-T on a half-time basis for two years, eventually becoming the full-time secretary in 1925. It has been stated that with his resume he likely gave up leading a prosperous life for his love of Gyro. It was said that he was married to his Gyro dream in the beginning, but he married in the 1920s and had two children. He died in 1960. It was also noted that he answered all problems with the question "is it best for Gyro?" He was admired for his inflexibility of purpose, his devotion to duty, his kindness, and his ability to appreciate the other fellow's viewpoint.

Clarence H. Handerson, more familiarly known as Gus, was born on 23 February 1889 in Cleveland. Apparently, he was a "bear for work." Any project he took on was a success. He was always the life of the party. Upon graduation, he like Kagy, went into business. He married in April 1915. Unfortunately, his health failed him in 1941 and he died in 1942 of heart problems.

Paul Schwan - was born in Cleveland on 27 July 1889. After attaining his law degree, he joined a law firm, but he never lost contact with his college chums, meeting often for lunches and dinners. It was during these meetings that he gave voice to his convictions on friendship which crystallized into Gyro. He married in March 1918, and after a honeymoon of one week reported to the Army on April 1. He contracted influenza and three weeks later he died on April 17.

It might be considered that Kagy was the affable stalwart, Handerson the cheerleader, and that Schwan was the true instigator of Gyro. Besides the three founders, Ed Kagy as S/T had profound admiration for several other key individuals who did most exemplify the essence of Gyro or advanced its cause.

Other Special Members

Albert Kern - a charter member and member of the executive committee. He was club secretary and then International Secretary from 1917-1919 while the executive was off to war.

Orville "Orrie" Peterson - charter member. As First Lieutenant, Artillery, in France 1917-1818 he went through numerous engagements unscathed, but developed pneumonia in his last week and died in France.

Leon K. Jordan - joined in 1913. He was entirely responsible for forming the Buffalo club and played a big part in starting Chicago and Cincinnati. He was elected to a two-year term as first International President 1917.

"Doc" R. L. Jett - also joined in 1913. A physician, he served with a medical unit attached to the Serbian Army. Killed while on duty at an advance field hospital. He was the first Gyro to die for his country.

James L. "Jimmie" Hubbell - the last of the original group in 1912 before the organization was named. He had a fascination with the study of the gyroscope and, when others were facetiously discussing names like Peerless Perspires and Ready Radiators, managed to advance his ideas related to the gyroscope - hence the name GYRO. He and Gus published the club bulletin until 1917 when it became an international publication. After 5-6 years of editing for Buffalo, Toronto, and Cincinnati, he became editor of the Gyroscope in 1923 and continued until 1934.
